forward to its appearance will be glad to know that there is now being offered to the reading public a book in which Virginians especially will be interested.

to the reading public a book in which Virginians especially will be interested. It is called "The Recollections of a Lifetime," is written by Hon, John Goode, Virginia lawyer, soldier and statesman, and is by him dedicated to the memory of his wife, mother and son. It is published by the Neale Company, of Washington and New York.

Mr. Goode records in the first chapter of his book that he was born May 27, 1829. It will, therefore, be seen that he is seventy-seven years old. Yet the many Richmond friends who had the pleasure of shaking hands with him on the occasion of his recent visit to this city, of seeing his genal smile and listening to his kindly humor, can scarcely face the realization of his assertion that he has passed the limit allotted by the psalmist, as the span of human existence.

To properly appreciate what he has accomplished in his "Recollection of a Lifetime," It must be remembered that Mr. Goode, having graduated at Emory and Henry College, was admitted to the Virginia bur in 1851; that he was a member of the Virginia House of Delegates from 1852 to 1857; that he belonged to the State convention which passed the ordinance of secession in 1861; that he served in the Confederate Congress from 1862 to 1855, and during the recesses of that body, was volunteer aide on the staff of General Jubal A. Early.

staff of General Jubal A. Early.

Practiced Law in Norfolk.

After the war was over he began a successful law practice in Norfolk, Va. He was elected to the United States Congress in 1875 and remained in office until 1881; was a presidential elector in 1852, 1856 and 1884; United States Solicitor-General from May of 1855 to August of 1886; member of Chilean Claims Commission during the years 1893 and 1894 and president of the Virginia Constitutional Convention, meeting in this city, during 1801-1802.

From this imperfect outline, the importance of the events in which Mr. Goode has been an active participant, the greatness of many people he has familiarly known; the changes he has witnessed and the wisdom he has ingathered will be impressed duly upon the mind. When added to these facts, is the additional consideration, that the great amount of social, historical and political data in the scope of his mental vision has been reduced to orderly sequence by so accomplished a writer, one so true to the high-minded and chivairle standards that made a part of every Virginian's training in his earlier day, a truer conception as to the aims and purposes of his authorship will be awakened.

How Good Food may Turn to Poison

ECAY is not digestion, you place in the stomach. Food decayed in the body after being eaten is as dangerous to health as food decayed before being eaten. Food nourishes or poisons, just according to how long it remains in the Bowels undigested.

Cascarets are the simplest and surest safeguard against Delayed Digestion yet discovered.

Most of the Digestion occurs in the thirty feet of intestines that connect with the Stomach.

They are lined with a set of little mouths, that squeeze Digestive Juices into the Food eaten.

The Digestive Juices thus mix with the food, just as Saliva mixes with Cascaret tablets, dissolving and changing that food into nourishment, as it passes along the channel.

The Intestines are also lined with milknow, even when it takes itons of little suction pumps, that draw the Nutriment from Food, as it passes them in going through.

> This Nutriment is then carried into the Blood, and spread over the Body as Brain, Bone and Brawn,

> But, when the Bowel-Muscles are weak, the Food moves too slowly to stimulate the little Castric Mouths and there is no flow, or too little flow of Digestive Juice, to change the food into nourishment.

> Then, the food decays in the Bowels, and in the thirty feet of Intestines.

> When this Decay begins the little suction pumps draw Poison from the decayed Food, into the blood, instead of the Nutrition it should have drawn.

Now, Cascarets contain the only com-Soon as placed in the mouth it starts bination of drugs that Stimulates these Muscles of the Bowels and Intestines just as a Cold Bath, or open-air Exercise, leader of the Whig party, Henry Clay, he heard as a boy of fifteen on the sum-mit of the Peaks of Otter. He says of General Combs:

General Combs:

"Being introduced by the chairman of the meeting, he stood a moment and surveyed the vast audience before he uttered a word. He then reached out. plucked a leaf from an overhanging limb, made a sup with it, stooped down and filled it with rain-water, which had fallen the night before, and was collected in a little hole on the top of the rock, and commenced his address as follows:

"Fellow Citizens,—Standing here this morning on the topmost rock of the farfamed Peaks of Otter, I propose with this pure rain-water, which has just fallen from the heavens, to drink the health of Henry Clay, that fearless tribune of the people and born leader of men."

Mr. Goode does not forget to pay a warm tribute of praise to Hon. John W. Brockenbrough, of Lexington, Va., whose law school he attended from 1849 to 1851, and for whom he has evidently retained the profoundest feelings of respect and esteem. In a chapter embodying the reminiscenses of his membership in the General Assembly for the year 1852, he mentions interesting meetings with the late Rev, Dr. Moses D. Hoge, the Hon. John Y. Mason and many others accompanying his mention in many instances with charming bits of personality, developed conversationally, and thoroughly characteristic of the person in question.

oughly characteristic of the person in question.

He describes his impressions of Madame Patti, who sang to a crowded Richmond audience during the winter of 1852, and says that he heard, during that same season, Thackeray read his secture on the "Four Georges," and "please his Richmond audience exceedingly." He tells an amusing story of former Governor Henry A. Wise during the campaign of 1855, when Mr. Wise during the campaign of 1855, when Mr. Wise during the campaign of 1855, when Mr. Wise delivered a great speech against the knownothing party, by saying:

"After the meeting adjourned, I accompanied Mr. Wise to his hotel. While we were standing on the platform, Daniel K. Forgle, a man celebrated for his wit and humor, came up and requested him, he took Mr. Wise by the hand, and looking him in the face said: T shall vote against you, sir, but you will win the race.' Why so? said Mr. Wise. Well, you remind me so much of Weehawk? said Mr. Forgle. "Who is Weehawk," said Mr. Forgle. "Who is Weehawk," said Mr. Wise. I never heard of him.' Well," said Mr. Forgle, "I went upon a race field once and they had a horse called Waxey that beat anything brought against him. Finally, one day, they brought out a little, ugly, rowboned scrawny thing with his head between his foreless, and he looked as if the witches had been in his mane and tall; but at the tap of the drum his head was up and away he went and heat Waxey out of sight. His name was weehawk, and when John introduced you to the people this rourning, you reminded me so much of Weshawk."

Seccssion Convention.

Southern leaders and soldlery speaks for itself and needs no praise. Mr. Goode writes of the Confederata Congress of which he was a member that! Of the personnel of this body, it is no exaggeration to say that it has rarely, if ever, been surpassed for intellectual visor and forensin ability."

He corrects a misapprehension that has existed in the public mind concerning the Hambton Roads Conference, held between President Lincoln and Secretary Seward, on the one side, and on the other by Commissioners, the appointees of President Davis, on February 3, 1865. Mr. Goode asserts that, at this meeting, Mr. Lincoln said he should be in favor, individually, of the Government paying a fair indemnity to the owners for the loss of their slaves, but on this subject he said he could give no assurance and enter into no stipulation."

Thus on the best of authority, is disposed of, a failary that has gained as widespread credence as many other unfounded stories, that have passed for the truth of history.

The post-bollum chapters of Mr. Goode's "Recollections" deal with a more generally well known but none the less important period. They begin with his removal to Norfolk, go on through reconstruction of the State government by Francis Pierpont; the administration of Governor Gilbert C. Walker; of Mr. Goode's election to Congress and his impressions there of famous Republican leaders: of his association with John Randolph Tucker, of Virginia; L. Q. C. Lamar, of Mississippi; Zebulon B. Vance, of North Carolina, and Wade Hampton, of South Carolina.

His chapter on the settlement of the Hayes and Tilden controversy for President with The Remarks of the Hayes and Tilden controversy for President when Flacters! Commission is one Carolina, and Wade Hampton, of South Carolina.

His chapter on the settlement of the Hayes and Tilden controversy for President by the Electoral Commission is one of the ablest and most carefully written in the book, and is vitally interesting and important.

And so, with lively progression, the reader passes on to the account of the Virginia Constitutional Convention meeting in Richmond, June 12th, 1991, when Mr. Goode was elected president and, as the people of Virginia will always remember, discharged his duties with the same ability and conscientiousness that had marked his previous public and private life. He brings his book of "Reccalcellons" to a close by interesting chapters on the Jamestown Exposition Company, on Commedore Maury and Mount Vernon. He addresses his parting word to the young men of the State, to whom he speaks with such sympathy and encouragement, that it is to be hoped all whom he speaks with such sympatry and encouragement, that it is to be hoped all young Virginians will get his book for the sake of that final message, as well as for the multiplicity of excellent information preceding it.

Last evening, the recital for graduation in plane was given by Miss Deborah Young, of Louisiana, and Miss Berta Garth, the daughter of Mr. Wm. Garth, of near Charlottesville. These young ladies are subjects of special congratulation, as very few diplomas in plane have ever been received from this institution, on account of the difficulty of the course. The renditions of both young ladies proved them entirely worthy of this rare and high honor. The playing was beautiful and brilliant.

The director of music, Professor Walter M. Tillebroum, of Boston, was highly spoken of for the character of the programme as well as for the success of his pupils.
